Straitjacketed at the U of O

A law professor’s bad judgment is no reason for unreasonable demands from intolerant colleagues

Dear President Trump,

Committee of Annoyed Constituents

Dear President Trump,

Committee of Annoyed Constituents

The University of Oregon announced in late May that a law professor, being one of its first and foremost duties, is to be placed on administrative leave for undisclosed reasons. The professor, whose name is not being released, is accused of making inappropriate sexual advances towards another individual, though the specifics of the case are unclear. The university has stated that it is taking action to ensure a safe and respectful working environment for all employees.

As a faculty member at the University of Oregon, I strongly condemn any form of harassment and assault. It is unacceptable for anyone to be subjected to such behavior, and we must all work together to create a community where everyone feels safe and respected.

The administration’s decision to place the教授 on administrative leave sends a clear message that such behavior will not be tolerated. This is a positive step forward in addressing the issue of sexual harassment and assault on our campus.

As a member of the community, I urge all members to take this opportunity to reflect on how we can contribute to a culture of respect and inclusivity. Let us work together to create a University of Oregon where everyone feels welcome and valued.

Sincerely,

The Register Guard

STROKE SURVIVOR'S TALE

By Jeryl Jacoby

Grace Bodin begins to smile, and the crease grows gradually until it infuses the whole of her face, as a sunrise paints an east-facing mountain slope with ethereal light. Seeing it, you might think of the soft and rhythmic throb of the machine as the bobbin rises and falls.

The shirts and the trousers and the dresses she made for herself and her daughters, Linda and Lorraine, and her son, Eric.

"Oh, but Bodin loved to sew."

You would know that even if she didn't tell you it was so. You would know from that smile.

But there is more to this memory and you see that too, as Bodin's smile slowly slides away and her eyes glister and her right hand clenches more tightly the crumpled tissue.

Bodin's left hand is empty. Empty and still.

On this bright and balmy April afternoon, which outside Meadowbrook Place in Baker City feels rather more like July, almost 12 months have passed since Bodin had a stroke.

"I can tell you exactly when it happened," she said. "March 26, 2015."

Bodin, who's 86, doesn't remember the stroke. But she remembers everything else.

"I lost one day only — it was a Thursday," she said.

Bodin recalls the day before the stroke, when she visited the other members of her book club. She remembers falling, and being taken to the emergency room.

The final thing she remembers is being strapped on a gurney.

"About the flight to Boise, Idaho, about the first day in intensive care, Bodin knows only what her daughters, both of whom live in Baker City, and her doctor have told her. It was a major stroke."

Doctors determined that Bodin's stroke was caused by atrial fibrillation — basically, her heart beat irregularly, or, as Bodin puts it, "skipped a beat.

This allowed blood to pool long enough in her heart to form a clot.

Her heart, which before that day hadn't given her even a bit of trouble in eight and a half decades, pumped the dot into her brain. It lodged like a boulder in a small stream, blocking the blood flow and resulting in a stroke.

The stroke affected the left side of Bodin's body.

She has minimal use of her left arm and leg, and she gets around in a wheelchair.

Bodin said her initial reaction, once her memory had returned minus that one day, was disbelief.

"I was a pretty healthy person," she said with a hint of indignation that briefly clarifies the accent that betrays her birthplace of New Jersey.

Although Bodin's mother died of a stroke at age 75, Bodin herself, even at age 85, had a perfectly healthy blood pressure. Her cholesterol was fine.

"I thought strokes only came from high blood pressure or being overweight," Bodin said. "I was mistaken.

But though she was surprised by the stroke, Bodin did not see it as a setback.

"She answers every question about the physical effects of the stroke without hesitation,” said Dr. John Collins, a stroke survivor who lives near Bodin.

A big smile pops up often as Grace Bodin, a stroke survivor, talks about her life from New Jersey to Montana and now at Baker City.

Me and Meniere’s: It’s something I have, not something I am

The first time I noticed something was wrong with me, I was sitting on my living room couch, reading a book. It began as a heavy, rolling headache at the base of my skull, only rather than thudding away like my usual headaches, this one seemed to head its way toward my forehead, and as it did so I began to feel the weight of my head, which seemed surprisingly heavy.

The sensation I experienced thus has been described about a hundred different ways, but the one I’ve found to be most accurate, I think, is: It was like a two-to-three-pound weight tethered to my neck which swung around on a horizontal axis, yanking my equilibrium back and forth. Meanwhile, everything in my field of vision was rotating counterclockwise, as if I had just hopped on the merry-go-round but hadn’t gotten off. Had an airplane dropped a bomb on my eyes just then, they would have knocked them scanning back and forth, back and forth, in a futile attempt to lock on to a plane that doesn’t exist.

I figured the best course of action was to somehow stand up through a house in the general direction of the bathroom, and I made it to the sink, where all the weight seemed to drain away.

When I awoke two days later, I noticed that for the first time in my life I could hear the sound of my own voice, and it was a revelation. The sound was not as loud as it had been before, but it was distinct, and it was not a bother. I was able to control my symptoms by avoiding the triggers. The triggers were not always certain, but I was able to keep the headache to a minimum. I felt better.

In the months that followed, I was able to avoid the triggers. The headaches became less frequent, and eventually they stopped altogether. I was able to control my symptoms by avoiding the triggers. The triggers were not always certain, but I was able to keep the headache to a minimum. I felt better.

Tallon ready to return to the pitch after injuries

By Lukas Eggert
The Tidings-Observer

TALLAHASSEE — On Oct. 9, 2019, Tallon was playing soccer for the first time in the state playoffs. The Dragons were leading 1-0 against Springfield. Play was halted after Tallon was struck in the face by a ball and left the field in tears.

"I was devastated," Tallon said. "I thought I had lost my chance to play in the soccer season." Tallon rushed to the emergency room where she underwent surgery to repair a broken cheekbone and knocked out teeth.

"I was scared," Tallon said. "I didn't know if I would ever be able to play again."

The surgery was successful, and Tallon returned to the field for the state tournament. Tallon scored the winning goal in the state championship game to lead her team to victory.

"I was so happy," Tallon said. "I had worked so hard for this moment."

Tallon's return to the field inspired her teammates and fans alike. She was voted the Most Valuable Player of the state championship game.

"I was so proud," Tallon said. "I had proved to myself and everyone that I could still play at a high level."

Tallon's return to the field has helped her team, and she has inspired others to believe in themselves and their dreams.

"I want to encourage others to never give up," Tallon said. "No matter what happens, you can always find a way to come back stronger."
